INTRODUCTION

Due to depressed economic conditions following the Civil War, the United States Congress, in 1867, passed a federal bankruptcy law. The law had several objectionable features and was finally repealed in 1878. During the eleven years the law was in effect, over 600 individuals and corporations filed for bankruptcy in the state of Kansas. The records concerning these bankruptcy cases are part of the records of the U.S. District Court of the District of Kansas, and are available for research at the Federal Archives and Records Center in Kansas City, Missouri.

The case files are divided into two basic series. The first series, the Bankruptcy Case Files, contain official court documents relating to the cases. These include court orders, depositions, warrants, petitions, schedules of debts and inventories of property held by the debtors.

The second series consists of the Register's Case Files. The Register was a court official who was responsible for handling the administrative business of the court in the bankruptch cases. He held meetings with creditors, gathered proofs of debts, and assisted in dividing the property of the debtor among the creditors. The Register's Files contain correspondence, depositions and petitions relating to these activities.

The Register's Files also contain one box of miscellaneous bankruptcy files which were received from the Kansas State Historical Society.

Filed with the bankruptcy records are two docket books. These books contain a list of major court actions taken on each case, and serve as a useful index to the case files.

Economic historians will find these cases useful for analyzing business activities in frontier Kansas. The flow of trade and investment can be traced through the lists and petitions in these files. Local historians and genealogists will also find useful material on the activities of the individuals who filed for bankruptcy, many of whom were prominent pioneers.
